School district seeking input

The Enumclaw School District is looking for community input about its current and future technology. Survey results will be used to help determine if a technology bond is in the district’s future.

Monday the district fired up its Web site to take community response to an on-line survey. The district will keep the survey open until Nov. 2.

Enumclaw's technology team is working with the Puget Sound Educational Service District to provide a comprehensive review of the technology resources and standards the district currently has in place.

This review includes an in-depth request for information from the Technology Team; a survey of staff, students and community; group interviews and comparisons with districts of comparable size and resources.

Once the information is compiled by the PSESD, it will be provided to a Technology Work Committee which includes teachers from all grade levels, building administration, librarians, Technology Team members, a community member, and a district administrator. It will then be their task to review the information and data and provide a comprehensive plan for the future to an oversight committee and then to the superintendent.

To participate, community members can go to http://psesd.surveytool.org/survey/surveylogin.cfm?SID=569 to take the community survey.

To participate in a group interview or serve on the Technology Oversight Committee, call Janice Franz at 360-802-7121.

Courier Herald Article – October 17, 2007